8 of release in criminal proceedings.

Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau

This bill eliminates monetary bail as a condition of release for a defendant charged with, or convicted of, a crime.

Under current law, a defendant who has been arrested for a criminal offense or a defendant who has been convicted of a crime and is awaiting sentencing may be released with monetary bail as a condition of release. Monetary bail may be satisfied by the execution of a bail bond with sufficient sureties or by payment of the indicated amount in cash. Current law allows a court to impose other conditions of release, including limitations on travel and requirements for the defendant to avoid alcohol or controlled substances, to avoid contact with certain persons, and to participate in certain programs. If the defendant fails to appear in subsequent proceedings or violates a condition of release, he or she forfeits the monetary bail.

Under the bill, a court is required to release a defendant before trial unless it finds, by clear and convincing evidence, that there is a substantial risk that the defendant will not appear for trial or will cause serious bodily harm to a member of the community or intimidate a witness if he or she is released. Under the bill, the court may not use the nature, number, and gravity of the offenses as the sole sufficient reason for refusing to release the defendant.

The bill also eliminates the practice of imposing a monetary bail on a witness to ensure the witness's appearance at trial, eliminates the use of monetary bail to compensate victims of crimes, and eliminates the use of monetary bail as a means of securing a person's appearance in a civil forfeiture action.

The bill allows the court to set nonmonetary conditions of release for defendants and for persons convicted of a crime but not sentenced or ordered to release upon or pending appeal.
